 - ◊ Sometimes, she would get lost for a few minutes during a lecture trying to answer a students question, which often made her run out of time before she could finish the material in the lecture. Besides that, she was effective.

 - ◊ Nicole Hamilton always well informed of the material and answered all of the students questions to the best of her ability. She was able to convey her knowledge well and I learned a lot. One issue that she has is that, when she's looking for answer to a question she's asked she tends to step over people answers and not let them finish their thoughts.

 - ◊ Frankly put, I never experienced such terrible time mismanagement as I did in this lecture. Sometimes lecture would end with 10+ slides to go, never to be seen again. Far more often, lecture would end 20+ minutes early, even up to 45 minutes early on one occasion. I understand that all sections receive the same content in any given lecture, and that to some degree this is the fault of the course structure. However, the vast majority of the responsibility for time management lies with the instructor, who prepares their own lectures in a way that matches their individual style. It should absolutely never be the case that less than half the time allotted is used for a lecture. It should also not be the case that a student has to doubt that a lecture was prepared thoughtfully. Understand that from the perspective of an out-of-state student who pays full tuition, the severe lack of teaching is akin to thievery. I pay for a full education, and that is what I expect. I do not expect that simply because an instructor can go through some level of requisite content in a shorter period, that that is what I will receive. I do not expect that I will receive the bare minimum teaching required to push me through a program to get a degree and be shoved out to industry. I expect a little better from the University of Michigan and its esteemed faculty.

 - ◊ I enjoyed having Professor Hamilton. I would watch lecture recordings every night and it's apparent that she has an insane amount of knowledge and experience with the field. Only thing I'd suggest she work on is how she speaks to students 1 on 1. I'd only ever spoken to her briefly and she was respectful to me but in some instances, she was a bit condescending or rude to students who said or asked something silly during or after lecture.

 - ◊ Since the first first half the semester, she was much more effective at taking questions at appropriate times and making sure to keep their content on topic and concise. This may be because she adapted her teaching style, or that the topics we were covering were more unfamiliar and I had similar questions to those that were being asked.
